How the Fundamental Differences in Supreme Court Justice Jurisprudence has been Destructive to America.

If Supreme Court Justices truly uphold the Constitution, how could they be so diametrically opposed in their rulings? Our Constitution and laws were concisely written, so one would think most Supreme Court rulings would be unanimous, but they rarely are. To understand why there is such a profound divide in jurist opinion, we must look at how Conservative and Liberal justices differ in applying America's founding principles.

America was founded on self-evident principles that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights of Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness. While this phrase from the Declaration of Independence is not legally binding, it is widely referenced as the basis of our government. These principles have a hierarchy, and the Founders listed them in their order of precedence.

The right to life has highest precedence and is the foundational right on which all other rights are established. Without life all other rights are irrelevant. The right to life also provides the basis for equality. Gone are the days when rulers had life and death authority over their subjects. The President has no authority over your life and the President's life has no greater value than any other person. There is no minimum or maximum age, nor minimum level of mental capacity or consciousness to have the right to life.

The second fundamental right is liberty. Liberty is the state of being free within society from control or oppressive restrictions imposed by authority on one's way of life, behavior, or political views, as well as the freedom of thought and expression, and equality before the law.

The third fundamental right is the pursuit of happiness, or the right to the means to acquire and possess property, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety. Clearly the pursuit of happiness is not possible without the rights of life and liberty to do so.

The source of most division in the Supreme Court is derived from how these fundamental rights are applied. Where a conservative justice will generally uphold the natural hierarchy of the fundamental rights, liberal justices show little regard for the hierarchy and apply fundamental rights subjectively.

Unfortunately, the most destructive damage to American society has occurred when the Supreme Court has failed to uphold the natural hierarchy of fundamental rights. Here are two examples of incorrect rulings that the Court subsequently corrected.

In this first example, the court incorrectly prioritized the pursuit of happiness (property rights) over the right of liberty in their 1857 ruling on the 'Dred Scott v. Sandford' case.

Dred Scott was a slave who had moved to and from the free territories, including Wisconsin and Illinois, and eventually moved to Missouri. The Missouri statute stated that any person taken to a free territory automatically became free and could not be re-enslaved upon returning to a slave state. Missouri statute also allowed any person of any color to sue for wrongful enslavement. Having resided in a free territory, Dred Scott filed a lawsuit for his freedom in the St. Louis Circuit Court in 1846.

After a decade-long legal battle that ended in the U.S. Supreme Court, the Court ruled against Scott. The presiding Supreme Court justice on the case was Roger Taney who wrote "the Fifth Amendment protected slave owner rights because enslaved workers were their legal property". Taney was originally a liberal member of the Federalist Party, but became a Democrat under Andrew Jackson, leader of the Democratic Party. Jackson appointed Taney Attorney General of the United States, and Taney later became the fifth Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

The 'Dred Scott v. Sandford' case could have stopped the national debate about slavery in the territories; instead, the Court's ruling outraged abolitionists, widened the divide between the North and South, and contributed to the secession of the southern states and the Civil War.

In this second example, the Supreme Court incorrectly prioritized the right of liberty over the right of life.

In January 1973, the Supreme Court issued a 7–2 decision in 'Roe v Wade'. Justice Harry Blackmun wrote the majority opinion. Blackmun was originally a Minnesota Republican who ultimately became one of the most liberal justices on the Court. The Court determined that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment provided a fundamental right to privacy, which protected a pregnant woman's right to an abortion. The Court also concluded the right to abortion was not absolute and must be balanced against protecting women's health and prenatal life. The Court resolved these competing interests by creating a pregnancy trimester timetable to govern all abortion regulations in the United States. The Court also classified the right to abortion as "fundamental", which required courts to evaluate challenged abortion laws under the "strict scrutiny" standard, the most stringent level of judicial review in the United States.

The dissenting opinion correctly argued that the Court had no basis for deciding between the competing values of a pregnant women and unborn children. There was nothing in the language or history of the Constitution to support the Court's judgment. The Court simply fashioned and announced a new constitutional right for pregnant women and, with scarcely any reason or authority for its action, invested that right with sufficient substance to override most existing state abortion statutes.

In June 2022, the Supreme Court overruled 'Roe v Wade' in 'Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization' on the grounds that the substantive right to abortion was not "deeply rooted in this Nation's history or tradition", nor considered a right when the Due Process Clause was ratified in 1868.

The 'Roe v Wade' decision was the most extreme case of judicial legislation from the bench in the history of our nation. It clearly contradicted the fundamental right to life. Life, as an unalienable right from the creator, could not possibly have a variable starting point that was determined by the government, or the Supreme Court. There is no plausible argument for physical life to start at any other point than conception. Furthermore, for government to declare that one unborn child has a right to life while another unborn child does not is the most extreme form of discrimination.

The intentional loss of life for the benefit of others, whether it be abortion, euthanasia, war, or any other method of intentional death, is correctly defined as human sacrifice. The question we should ask is whether human sacrifice should be a normal part of a modern free society? Or should we always strive to protect the sanctity of life?

The concept of sacrificing life for liberty is not new to our nation. Founding father Patrick Henry once gave a motivating speech that ended with the phrase, "I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!". While Henry's speech inspired the Second Virginia Convention to commit Virginian troops to the Revolutionary War, the concept of liberty over life was not a foundational principle of our nation. It is important to note that the Declaration of Independence was not a declaration of war against Great Britain. It was King George III who intentionally sacrificed the life of his subjects to protect the prosperity and control of his kingdom.

The Founders had great respect for the sanctity of life and created a government system where no one person had life and death authority over another. Unlike King George III, the President has no power to declare war nor power to order the assassination of an enemy. Those powers reside in Congress. Similarly, within the judicial branch, a person's life is protected by the right to trial by a jury of one's peers.

Has 'Roe v Wade' been destructive to America? Seriously ask yourself if the morality of our nation has improved or declined since 'Roe v Wade'?

Today we see many activist groups in America such as National Right to Life, All Lives Matter, Black Lives Matter, and others. If you think these organizations are motivated solely by religious or discrimination concerns, you are missing the big picture. For fifty years since 'Roe v Wade' our nation has prioritized liberty over life, and as a result, society has completely abandoned the sanctity of life at many levels. The human sacrifice of abortion, in some states even at the time of birth, is now misconstrued as a civil right and a medical procedure of convenience. The human sacrifice of euthanasia has become a justifiable method to reduce medical costs. We routinely sacrifice life by engaging in military conflicts to improve American prosperity instead of only waging war for national defense. Our schools instruct our children to place greater emphasis on individual pride and self-indulgence than in protecting the sanctity of human life. Society's respect for life has diminished so far that many liberals now strive for the government to establish a criterion for 'meaningful life' to expand the opportunities for human sacrifice to improve society. This could mean that one day an infant with Down's Syndrome or grandparents with Alzheimer's may not have the right to life because it is not meaningful.

On April 4th we can halt the decline in our society. Join me in voting for former Supreme Court Justice Daniel Kelly, who truly understands and protects human rights, or you can allow our society to continue to crumble by voting for the female justice who openly supports the human sacrifice of abortion up to the point of birth and has pledged to legislate from the bench, perhaps even to the point of dictating who among us has meaningful life.

Join me in taking time to pray for repentance in our nation. – Bill Laurent

Thank You to the Many

The family of Dolores "Dee" Foster wishes to thank all who have cared for her and tended to her needs, physical and spiritual. A special thank you to Father Gregory Michaud for being available to give mom the Sacrament of the Sick and Dying just hours before the angels closed her eyes. Mom always looked forward to the days Father came to offer the Holy Mass and the Sacraments to the residents of Neillsville Retirement Community and was grateful to the Eucharistic ministers who distributed Communion regularly. Mom looked forward to the visits and it brought the joy of Christ into her heart. The Neillsville Retirement Community leadership and staff provided her with exceptional and compassionate care. She especially enjoyed sharing meals and activities with the other residents of the Retirement Community. It was easy for her to call NRC her home. Thank you also to Compassus Home Hospice Care who managed her health care needs in her final weeks. The nurses, chaplain, and call people like the NRC staff are top shelf caring and concerned professionals. Many thanks to Gesche Funeral Home for assistance in the final affairs and planning her funeral and celebration of the life to come. A special recognition to Neillsville and its residents, school system, and businesses for providing mom with just the right environment to raise her family in safety and with appropriate values.

AND GOD SAYS . . .

He [the Antichrist] also forced everyone, small and great, rich and poor, free and slave, to receive a mark on his right hand or on his forehead, so that no one could buy or sell unless he had the mark, which is the name of the beast or the number of his name. Rev 13:16-17

In an online article published on WND.com, March 1, 2023, entitled "The dangers of the digital ID," author Steve Jordahl writes:

The world of digital currency and identification is on the way, and one seminary professor says it's a clear preview of the coming tribulation.

114 countries are exploring digital currencies, making up more than 95% of the world's GDP [Gross domestic product]. Several countries have already rolled it out, others are in the process of doing so, and the US has run trials to see how it can join the revolution.

. . .[B]ut Dr. Mark Hitchcock, research professor of Bible exposition at Dallas Theological Seminary, says it is a dangerous idea.

"Digital currency is trackable, it's traceable, and it's programmable to what you spend it on," he lists. "It can expire when they want it to go away, so that's a way to control people economically."

This is exactly what God said more than 2000 years ago — "no one could buy or sell unless he had the mark [that is, the approval of the state]." And the thing is, this is not a far off goal. The globalists goal is for this to be operational by 2030.

Never before, in the history of the world, has this concept ever been possible, let alone becoming a reality. This is unique to our generation.

So this means at least four things. For the believer in Jesus Christ it means, first, that His return is very near and that's exciting. And second, we will be forced to participate in this global economy or suffer the consequences of not being able to buy or sell and the persecution that will accompany our decision. The third thing is, if we choose not to participate, we will suffer the wrath of God, which will be far worse and will never end. (see Revelation 14:9-12).

The fourth thing is that digital currency is not merely an economic or a political matter, it is spiritual at its foundation. Therefore, we as believers in Jesus Christ need to be aware of what is happening, voice our concerns, and prepare ourselves for what is coming. To do less than this is to be irresponsible.

For comments, concerns or questions call 715-284-2351.
